A curious streak seems to run through Arrington's family. What they call "dope" seems to be a rather staple article of diet. Through two or three generations it has been the habit to use this "dope," beginning with an incident at the signing of a will. At all events, those relatives who have been to the Capitol to discuss Arrington's case have talked freely of their addiction to the opiate, of whatever it is.

Arrington is supposed to be affected with a mental disorder, perhaps because of "dope." After the murder he disappeared, and is said by some to have remained about his home, The Governor offered a reward of $100 for his apprehension, and he was cought at home, after he had been at large
